

Berkeley Marina from César Chávez Park

In the late 1970's Berkeley's squalid garbage dump on the edge of San Francisco Bay was transformed into rolling grassy hills with splendid views and water on three sides. Even now with the final design far from complete, this new waterfront park provides a delightful playground for strollers, cyclists, kite fliers, and sunset watchers.

John Kenyon